National Banana Pudding Festival

Detailed description of the website

The National Banana Pudding festival acts as the central marketing target, the online festival program, and general information including vendor and contestant applications. The website features a chat box which is connected live to volunteer phones and enables them to respond in realtime to visitors asking questions through the website. The website is also connected to the festival merchandise inventory and gives shoppers an online store where they purchase T-shirts, cookbooks and other festival gear year-round. The site is designed to be colorful and attractive to visitors. All the information a visitor might want to know about the festival is easy to find and clearly displayed. The site has visitors year-round, but during the month of our annual festival the traffic increases by hundreds of times.

Can it track statistics? Is it interactive? Is it mobile-friendly? Please provide explanation.

The website tracks visitors via built-in analytics that tell us what pages visitors are finding useful and tracks our traffic, among other things. It is highly interactive with videos to watch, applications to download, a contact form, and live chat available. The site is fully mobile friendly and looks great on phones, which is vital because in 2022, 63% of our visitors used a mobile device to visit the site.

A Great Time For A Good Cause

October 7 Saturday (9am - 6pm) & Oct 8 Sunday (12pm-5pm) 2023 | Ag Pavilion in Centerville, Tennessee

The National Banana Pudding Festival started in 2010 when volunteers in Centerville, Tennessee found a way to help local non-profits earn money.

The festival has grown every year since then, but the mission to support non-profits remains the same. Thousands of people come to RiverPark in Centerville, TN on the first Sat+Sun of October every year to enjoy the live music, the national cook-off, the Puddin' Path, and more.
